About the school

At the Southern Highlands Rudolf Steiner School we value all aspects of the child. Our wholistic educational approach places equal emphasis on practical, creative, social and intellectual development.

Steiner education supports children to become balanced, confident and self-aware people with a sense of purpose in the world. Steiner students develop a unique depth of understanding about themselves, their relationships with others, society across history and the times in which they live.

Meet the teacher

"Having grown up in the Highlands and had my own Steiner education, I am delighted to return to the area in this exciting role. It is an honour to provide this highly relevant, quality education that equips children with all they need to thrive in life".

- Annabel Brown

About the kindergarten

Kindergarten is suitable for five to seven year olds, depending on a child's stage of development. Creative play is a vital element of the curriculum. Under the care of the specially trained teacher, the children learn through the imitation of adult life and creating their own imaginary worlds. The kindy week has a strong sense of rhythm, with a range of regular activities like painting, baking, crafts, movement, singing, walks, gardening and games. The daily story is a central feature, told by the teacher with wisdom and imagery that nourish the inner world of the child.

What the parents say

"My son is flourishing in an environment that expands his senses, nurtures his skills and embraces him as a valuable part of a warm community. I can't imagine a more supportive or inspiring situation for my son as he begins his educational life".

- Anna

"I am so grateful for this school. My child's interest in life and learning is different now. This is an education of expansion, not constriction".

- Inga
